

ASSISTED LIVING

MIRACLE MOMENT

Stanley Sheinbaum's

Miracle Moment
Autumn Wind
Assisted Living

In 1942, Stanley Sheinbaum knew exactly what he wanted to do: pilot a plane in the Army Aircorp (now Army Air Force). Poor hearing, and a doctor's orders, put an immediate end to his plans.

Yet Stanley wasn't letting go of his love for aircraft. So he volunteered anyway, becoming an Electronic Specialist and Staff Sargent working and flying on B-17 Bombers (a.k.a., the Flying Fortress). Even after his duty, he worked on planes, taking a job for Hughes Aircraft in Iran—until the environment overseas became too dangerous for Americans and he assumed his time in the air was over for good.

 But My Miracle Moment simply wouldn't hear of it. Knowing Stanley's unfulfilled desire to fly in a helicopter, and thanks to the help of Flight for Life Texas, it was arranged that he would embark on a 35-minute helicopter tour over our city.

And while his view must've been breathtaking, it was the enduring delight on his face that lit up the sky.